Girl Scout Troop 128

Los Angeles Council Round-up Warmup number two was held in March at Hansen Dam. The girls of troop 128, sponsored by the Torrance Kiwanis Club, left Friday afternoon and arriving after dark had a new experience of pitching tents by flashlight.

Saturday morning, after breakfast, due to the possibility of a storm, trenches were dug around the tents and tents were storm lashed. The girls attended various workshops and after lunch prepared tents for inspection. Saturday evening the 900 girls attended a campfire where they sang songs and enjoyed skits. As a special treat ice cream was served as a midnight snack.

SUNDAY morning the Girl

Scouts attended church services and after breakfast they participated in a wide game. Sheriffs patrolled the area on horseback as the girls struck camp and packed their gear on busses. Scouts Own was the final ceremony of the Roundup. Girls attending were: Candy Voien, Carolyn Jensen, Mary Kane, Jackie Harmon, and Janis Albright.

Recently members of the troop gathered at Linda Wyatt's home, 2640 W. 225, Torrance, for the first course of a progressive luncheon. The Girl Scouts then proceeded, on bicycles, to Mary Kane's home, where the girls served the main course, and then on to Candy Voien's home for dessert and games.

"There's something frightening about the picture of suburbia as painted by today's magazine and other writers, and I think I know what it is. It is the terrifying sameness of it all." — Clara Neal, Kiowa County (Okla.) Star-Review.

Harbor College Instructor Leads Double Life -- One of Them at Sea

By LYNN WELCH
Student Reporter

College instructor from September to June, and ship's purser from June to September—such is the double life led by Harbor College social science teacher Don Rogan.

During the winters the popular professor teaches anthropology, history, and geography, and during the summers he gets first hand information about the subjects he teaches.

ROGAN HAS had sea fever ever since he was a young lad, and he still pursues his travels with the same hope and excitement that he felt then. He first learned of his love for the sea as a deck boy during the summer of his 14th year. By the time he was 18, his unburn aspirations quickly unfolded when he found himself aboard a freighter as a beginning purser.

But he wanted a formal education too; so he attended the University of Southern California for a B.A. and later earned a Master's degree in social science by attending college at night and holding down various day positions, such as public accountant, salesman, claims agent and longshoreman.

SINCE obtaining his education, Rogan has added 5 years and 17 summers to his travel record, and 18 years to his teaching career.

He has visited Europe, Asia, South America, Africa, the Pacific islands, Australia, and New Zealand, and has taught at Moorpark, Huntington Park and Harbor, where he arrived in 1955.

Like many seamen, Rogan enjoyed most the beauty and variety of the Japanese islands, which he says are the favorites of almost all sailors.

"THE TRUE center of Oriental life is located on these three densely populated islands, and the people seem new and more exciting each time the country is revisited," he explains.

Since many of his summers are spent in various parts of the Orient, Rogan has become an authority on this part of the world.

"It is interesting to note the great development of Oriental educational opportunities," he says. "People, specifically parents, who once were able to give their children only protection and food, now make great sacrifices for their offsprings' educational advancement."

THROUGH education, also, women can be seen more frequently working outside the home, as well as having more authority within—thus helping to make possible an increasing equality for women. Mate selection and the means of courtship have become much more Western in composition and attitude, too.

"Influential factors in Oriental progress have been the rising production in trade and industry and the employment of democratic methods. Japan, which has worked through united efforts to attain her present status, has probably done more developing of democracy than any other nation in the East since since World War II."

ROGAN FINDS that he calls upon his wealth of travel experience daily in teaching, and often in public lecturing and in his current work as president of the Harbor College Faculty Association, member of the forum committee, and college representative on the Harbor Welfare Council.

"Nautical and academic careers mix well," he points out.
